Heat Impact Levels

More Information

Heat affects everyone differently. In order to better address heat risk and to provide a daily service with regard to preparing for heat events, the NWS has developed the experimental Heat Impacts Levels (HIL). The HIL is a forecast product which provides a quick view of heat risk potential over the upcoming seven days. The heat risk is portrayed in a numeric (0-4) and color (green/yellow/orange/red/magenta) scale which is similar in approach to the Air Quality Index (AQI) or the UV Index. In this way, it provides one value each day that indicates the approximate level of heat risk concern for any location along with identifying the groups who are most at risk. This product is supplementary to the official heat watch/warning/advisory program and is meant to provide continuously available heat risk guidance for those decision makers and heat sensitive populations who need to take actions at levels that may be below current heat product levels.

Category	Level	Meaning
Green	0	No Elevated Risk
Yellow	1	Low Risk for those extremely sensitive to heat
Orange	2	Moderate Risk for those who are sensitive to heat
Red	3	High Risk for much of the population, especially those who are heat sensitive and those without effective cooling
Magenta	4	Very High Risk for entire population due to long duration heat, with little to no relief overnight

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/www_bc_cal.php

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

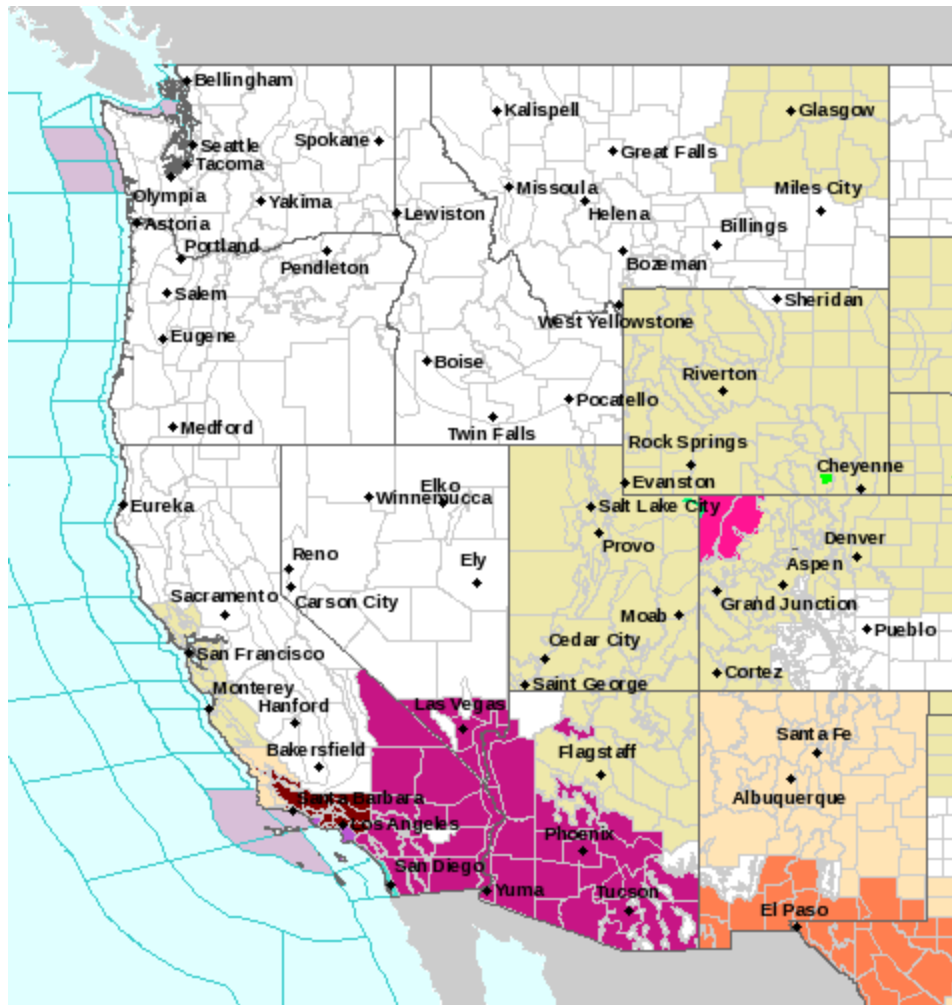

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The unseasonably strong, cold and wet weather system will be with us for a few more days. More periods of cloudiness and showers are likely through tonight for some areas. Isolated thunderstorms will continue to be possible, and they will likely be quite wet. One such storm near Redding Airport Wednesday delivered an inch to the gauge. More cloudy areas will be somewhat cooler, more sunny areas somewhat warmer, but all areas will remain well below seasonal normals. Another round of gusty west to southwest afternoon winds are expected to develop today. Relative Humidity (RH) will be high enough so those areas will be of lesser fire potential concern than recently. Once this cool weather system moves out of the area - which looks like Saturday - strong high pressure will quickly spread north across California from out of the desert southwest over the rest of weekend into early next week. there will be a very rapid rise in temperatures and drop in RH when that happens. Triple digit heat is expected to develop for the warmer inland areas early next week with potential for the warmest inland locations to reach highs around 108. RH will become low with many areas seeing overnight RH recovery only in the 30-45% range and afternoon values of 10-15% fairly widespread. Thunderstorms early next week appear unlikely at this time, but that situation will be watched closely for later next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Strong high pressure currently over Mexico will move northward into Arizona and New Mexico today, bringing a significant warming and drying trend to the region into early next week. Temperatures will be well over 100 degrees across the valleys and foothills by Sunday and the heat will be accompanied by widespread minimum humidity in the single digits and teens. Many locations will receive record heat Monday and Tuesday. Southeast flow aloft will bring a little increase in humidity along with a little cooler temperatures to the region next Wednesday and Thursday. Isolated afternoon thunderstorms may occur over the mountains and deserts of Southern California and the Sierra next Wednesday and Thursday.
